

For Discussion: Article

Room No. 15

Today and undeniably, Russia stands virtually alone against what they do perceive as a kind of global criminal organization that boasts of redrawing not only maps of the Middle East and Africa, but has castrated Europe as well leaving that continent only a few short years, maybe even months, before civil war between what will be the Muslim majority and reemerging fascism.

Only recently (2016), mainstream news mistakenly reported attempts by the UAE to buy nuclear weapons from Israel. Similarly reports of Turkey's nuclear program and that of Saudi Arabia were leaked but quickly smothered. In truth, the Saudi's have owned WMD since 1982, according to sources in the IAEA and have used them in Yemen.

Similarly, a circular trade of nuclear weapons technology has existed between Germany and Israel for some time with Germany receiving nuclear weapons in trade for underwriting Israel's nuclear programs.

As late as 2003, the Johan Meyer nuclear team in South Africa, working with Israel and Germany, had produced up to a dozen devices, despite South Africa's dismemberment of their official program in 1990, turning their nine Hiroshima gun type nukes, each 13.2 kilotons, over to the US for disassembly.

Three of these weapons, according to sources involved in the transit of these weapons, had disappeared. For those with a short memory, these are the WMD's referred to by then UK Prime Minister Tony Blair, when he claimed Saddam Hussein was "45 minutes from a nuclear capability." Blair claimed that the missing South African nukes were in Iraq, and that they were moved through Syria to Lebanon following the 2003 invasion. The story of the three Syrian ambulances carrying Saddam's stolen South African nukes, their trip to Lebanon, to be stored in a hospital X Ray lab, hidden from American VELA satellites until loading for Gaza, or to be detonated off Haifa's waterfront, is how Blair really got the UK into the Bush war.

As to where the three disappeared weapons really went, one was reportedly exploded in North Korea, taken there by an Israeli submarine.

Thus, the real reason for the Washington nuclear conference had nothing to do with terrorism, but rather, rogue states and a chance to pass along a message of accountability that the nuclear genie, let out of the proverbial bottle on 9/11 according to some, or at the Baghdad airport in 2003, or at Tora Bora or Damascus or Yemen or even, heading back a bit, Bali or Oklahoma City, was no longer going to be tolerated even if it was the United States that had pulled the cork.

Remember, it was 2016 that Russia's President Putin stated that it would probably not be necessary to use tactical nuclear weapons against ISIS.

For background, we already know NATO keeps nuclear weapons in Turkey. But we also know that Turkey had Israel convert a number of its F16 fighter bombers to carry nuclear weapons. The US pulled its nuclear capable aircraft out of Turkey leaving only the bombs there, useless and, as far as such things can be considered, non-threatening.

The weapons are also highly secured through safeguards. Then, however, Saudi Arabia brought aircraft to Incirlik Air Force Base, planes brought but never flown although they are ostensibly there to attack ISIS, an organization Saudi Arabia supports as all know very well.

With those aircraft came teams trained in Israel who were, according to multiple sources, given training in overcoming safeguards were America's nuclear weapons to be seized by Turkey and loaded onto the Israeli modified F16s. The nuclear secrets required were stolen, as would have it, possibly by former US Senator, co-founder of the shadowy Federalist Society and Bush Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham, a shadowy character with long ties to organized crime families in the vending machine business in Detroit.
*****

Common story has it they were given to Bush terror Czar Richard Clarke, who handed them to an Israeli handler during a gala at the Israeli embassy.

Barack Obama was correct when he said that he feared nuclear weapons. What he was not saying was that it wasn't the weapons themselves, as nukes are used all the time, smaller weapons with controlled radiation or, when larger weapons are used such as in Yemen, it simply didn't happen if CNN failed to report it.

Things have gone this far, that governments can and do anything imaginable, based on their ability to walk away.

There is no accountability of any kind, no one to speak up, either out of fear of being discredited or simply out of the realization that saying something, whether about torture or the use of biological weapons, or even the odd nuke dropped here or there, nobody really cares.

Being killed by a suicide bomber while at a shopping center is far more real, and is becoming more real every day, in Europe now but in America soon, as many are predicting. Of course, these problems, terribly bad, have been around, in Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, Nigeria, Turkey, Kenya, Afghanistan, Pakistan and so many other places for a very long time and nobody has cared about this either.

Room No. 15

Discussion

Adversitate. Custodi. Per Verum